After 7 years as a Technical Project Manager I am looking for an opportunity to get back into dedicated software development. Programming has always been my passion and I miss being able to work on software problems daily.

While working as a Technical Project Manager I always try to contribute to my Dev teams through code reviews, system architecture, training in software development and Linux, and automation code and scripts.

Through the years I have contributed to numerous open source projects and I have continually used programming in my personal life to solve interesting problems.

As well, I am always reading about Tech and I have done my best to make sure I didn't lose much, if any, development skill.

I'm excited to get back into it and I appreciate the opportunity.
